MOTOR CARS
Model "A"

The Engine

Simplicity of design and ruggedness of construction contribute much to the efficient performance of the Model "A" power plant. The engine develops 40 horsepower at only 2,200 revolutions per minute, allowing continued fast operation with no strain on working parts. One of its important features is the "square" design, the cylinder bore and piston stroke being nearly equal. This permits the large piston displacement of 201 cubic inches. Other features are the ram horn design hot spot manifold, the unique distributor mounted on the top of the engine, the simplicity of the lubricating system, and the remarkably efficient system of cooling.

THERE is power in the WOLSELEY. It carries the suggestion of a pent-up force which may be liberated at your desire. This is engine perfection, the result of many years of British Engineering progress.

The singular beauty of line, enhanced by the quiet dignity of its upholstery, creates that indefinable suggestion of quality which distinguishes the WOLSELEY Car.

The model illustrated here is the WOLSELEY Six Sedan, priced at £690, with a beautiful and distinctive Australian body.
